NELLIE JARVIS.

The stanzas below are the production of Miss Lurie Gallop of Big Trails, and were occasioned by the death of little Nellie Jarvis, the infant daughter of Mr. and Mrs. O. Jarvis, of Tensleep.

You have pressed down the lids o'er her eyes so brown,
And brushed back the hair from her brow,
You have pressed your last kiss on her dear little face
Your darling has gone from you now.
Her poor little hands crossed over her breast,
Her sweet childish voice hushed forever.
And those dear little feet that never were still,
Have passed over that beautiful river.
Think not of the stroke that laid her so low,
Of her little form now grown so cold.
But think of the beautiful realms of love
Where she walks on the pavement of gold.
Your darling has gone from your hearthstone away,
On this earth you will see her no more.
Let this comfort you when you hear calls for her;
She is safe on that beautiful shore.
She has only gone to that beautiful land,
As all of us must sometime do.
And you will find by the side of that beautiful strand
She is watching and waiting for you.
